Pink October Celebration

October 25th, 2022

On the twenty-fifth of October 2022 at 9:30 am in the conference room, the National Institute for Research in Education in collaboration with the Badr Association for Cancer Control hosted an awareness day to support breast cancer patients, in what is known as Pink October.

During this conference, a series of activities were programmed to sensitize women about the seriousness of breast cancer and its spread in view of what global statistics indicate as well as the importance of early detection to reduce it, where an intervention was made to introduce the disease and the most important symptoms associated with it, and an applied activity was programmed explaining how to do a preliminary examination before going to the doctor.

At the end of the day's sensitization work, the attendees commended the organization of such meetings for their effective contribution to spreading awareness and saving the lives of thousands of women around the world, after which the conclusion of this day was announced at 13:00 pm in the hope of meeting on other occasions.
